it was only a notion and that we would never have consequences of any kind. It was more than a notion. It felt real and violent, horrifying. Our world has many hands full with other horrors and it was another occasion to consider just how mad and angry we are at the world. And how else to explain all the annoying rituals and customs of the season? Turning up the amps on family birthday parties, with all the loud music, games and sugar, only to watch them go berserk and destroy the house. The endless determination to be a family of a size everyone else in the neighborhood is having. I've talked to families where the parents just won't face reality and ignore all the statistics and statistics based reasoning. "Look, have you ever measured our family? We're fine!" They'll say. No, because we're not fine. We don't have room in our lives for that many people to visit in any given year. And it's not just Christmas and birthdays we want out of the way. People from our small and close-knit little corner of the world are everywhere around us, sucking us dry of space and energy, wanting our food and co-opting our cultures, like family drama and overlong books that last two thousand pages, every single year, for some reason. Everyone from the bigger region is also everywhere around us. And they're mostly just as annoying. After they spent the entire day watching fireworks in the North Pole, they descend upon us. They constantly make requests for favors, have expensive holidays and boasts of how great they are compared to people who live in the sticks and have no reason to be in their face. How cruel and petty. My brother-in-law is so damn obsessive about his own family that he forfeits any chance of not becoming a full-fledged recluse. When we visit, he stares at our family with great loathing. It's as if he can forfeit his own children's company by just being there. No one notices this except me. I am a paranoid conspiracy theorist who sees everything through the lens of his own paranoia. I write it all down and tuck it in a safe in the basement, where no one will ever see it. I hide in the basement. I'm probably based on 16S rRNA gene sequences indicated that strain YM88 belongs to the genus Brucella, and is most closely related to Brucella suis biovar 3, Brucella suis biovar 4, Brucella porci, Brucella ovis, Brucella melitensis and Brucella neotomae. The DNA G+C content of strain YM88 was 41.0 mol%, and the predominant cellular fatty acids were iso-C15 : 0 (24.6 %) and iso-C15 : 1 G (19.9 %). The major isoprenoid quinone was Q-8. The DNA-DNA relatedness values between strain YM88 and B. suis biovar 3 (AP 85Y), B. suis biovar 4 (AP 85A), B. porci (AP 90A) and B. ovis (NTCC 12376T) were 70.9-76.0, 23.6-26.9, 21.7-24.5 and 32.5-36.0 %, respectively. On the basis of phenotypic and phylogenetic analyses, strain YM88 represents a novel species of the genus Brucella, for which the name Brucella longa sp. nov. is proposed. The type strain is YM88 (=CICC 15103T=CCTCC AB 207019T).

Brucella longa sp. nov., isolated from a Chinese human. A Gram-negative, non-motile, non-spore-forming bacterium, strain YM88, was isolated from a Chinese human with chronic osteomyelitis. Phylogenetic analysis

Q: How do I access the SKScene in the view controller? In my SKScene I have a view that's over an SKNode that can be moved around. My viewController has a method moveMyView, where it's supposed to animate my view's node along its y axis and update the class for my view's node. I've tried: - (void)moveMyView:(id)sender { SKScene *fromScene = (SKScene *)self.view.window;

SKScene *toScene = (SKScene *)self.view.window; if (sender == self.view) {
