"On our first day of work, we have signed the program in a way that provides jobs and growth for Austria," Social Democrat Chancellor Christian Kern and his conservative ally Sebastian Kurz said on Monday. The two, in power since December, aim to make the country more attractive for investment by boosting infrastructure and improving the business environment. It will be their first opportunity to implement an ambitious, untried plan of their own. Some 3.3 million people voted for Kern and Kurz, making them the third party together since the end of World War Two, the end of a 68-year-long run of one party rule. Kern and Kurz had been in office for just over a month when the two
