Q: C# How to know that my Class has a property? I have a class like this: `class myClass { public double a; public double b; }` And i want to know when one of my class properties will be getter/setter. I want something like this: `public delegate void PropertySetter(object control, string propertyName); public delegate void PropertyGetter(object control, string propertyName); Class myClass { public double a; public double b; public void SetPropertyname(PropertySetter pSet) { //Do my stuff } public void GetPropertyname(PropertyGetter pGet) { //Do my stuff } }`

A: There is no way to detect whether the class members are configured to be accessible via public get/set methods. If you have only a few members, a simple approach would be to write a bit of code which takes advantage of the compiled model information to guess whether a member is a property: `public class MyClass { public double MyProperty { get; set; } }` `public class C#_CodeSnippet {`
