The connection body of the anchorage anchor forms the connection to the base. This connection body contains at least one anchoring connector, by means of which it is rotatably connected to the connection ring. This anchoring connector is a metal part which is partly embedded in the base, and it has a first portion which extends in parallel with the surface and which is intended for the connection of another connector provided on the base, such as for example for a bolt. The connection ring of the anchorage anchor is configured as a ring section, the cross section of which is smaller than the base, so that the inner surface of the ring section can be a function of the concrete structure and the outer surface of the connection ring can be a function of the concrete structure surrounding the anchorage anchor. The connection ring is provided with means for limited axial displacement in the vertical direction, at least over a part of its length, in order to enable a limited vertical displacement between the base and the connection ring.
