Technical Field This invention relates to the provision of a novel printing mechanism for a rotary press that provides for the printing of a continuous strip of printed material having a pre-determined length without requiring cutting and re-gluing steps. 2. Prior Art Rotary printing presses of the type having a blanket cylinder, an impression cylinder and a printing plate cylinder typically require a "drying" step for the perforations of the printing plate in order to permit the press to make a subsequent set of prints while maintaining the printing plate on the printing plate cylinder. The drying step is typically accomplished by passing the printing plate through a drying oven and then placing the printing plate onto the appropriate printing cylinder in a horizontal position. The printing plate must be subsequently removed from the printing cylinder and placed on a rotating drum or other means of support for the printed sheet of material. Various drying devices have been provided that make use of rollers or other mechanisms for creating an air flow through the printing plates. Examples of these prior art devices are disclosed in U.S. Pat. Nos. 2,912,853; 3,213,393; 3,331,771; 3,650,194; 3,868,871; 3,893,701 and 4,268,092. Once the printing plate has been dried, it is then rolled and placed on the appropriate cylinder as described above. U.S. Pat. No. 3,868,871 discloses the provision of a printing device and apparatus that makes use of the rollers used for transporting the paper into the rotary printing press. The device is constructed in such a manner that the printing plate must be cut and removed from the printing plate cylinder in order to allow the device to be positioned and used with a printing cylinder.
