I used the Smudge tool and the Color Correction tool to correct some of the color issues. The tool didn't help me to remove those marks entirely and I had to use a brush to make them disappear. The tool worked well for the adjustment I made but didn't work the same on all of the photos. Also, some of the modes are missing for some of the tools. I had to open the Preferences and try to figure out which mode I needed. I asked at the forum to see if others have the same issues with the tool and I was told that it works OK for some users. It worked for me on some of the photos, but not on others. Even with a good working program there are some things you can't control.

I finally updated my 5.1 to LR5.1 and it seemed to make my first experience with Lightroom a bit more enjoyable. Not to say that LR4 was a bad experience, just that it was a lot slower on my computer. The 5.1 seems to be a much better product and I look forward to trying out their new features and improvements that they seem to be adding to Lightroom every time they release a new build.

I tried Lightroom 5.1 on MacBook Pro, and is really not productive. While I like the swivel feature, opening the two windows seems to be a big time waste and when I try to change the tool property window it's not possible although I selected the right one, just by mistake I change the tool's setting.

I'm afraid this new tool has wiped my contract with Lightroom 4. It was too slow for me and required a lot of time, so there's no way I will use it. But from a price point of view, this new version is cheaper than the previous one.
