The Pentagon's human spaceflight program — which plans to launch a series of low-cost NASA-run missions to the International Space Station this year — is aiming to reduce costs by delivering its astronauts on Russian Soyuz spacecraft. But the current agreement with Russia expires next year. AD The United States is legally barred from using Russian spacecraft while the civil war in Syria continues and Moscow's human rights record is under close scrutiny for its involvement in Ukraine. And while some lawmakers have proposed altering the law to allow the United States to continue using Soyuz, such a change would require an act of Congress.
